STOKES REDIVIYUS.

It is a curious light, by the way, that Elward S. Stokes appears in as he again comes before the public. A physician named Thomas is suing for a divorce. His wife, a handsome young woman whom to married the account of the control of the country o he married five years ago, had an em-phatic way of resisting the suit. She doesn't care much whether the doctor gets a divorce or not, but she doesn't want to be bothered about it. To lawyers' clerks who have serving papers on her she has said that she will not do anything this she has consulted her friend, Edward S. Stokes, whom she riend, Edward S. Stokes, whom she calls by his old familiar name of "Ed."
"Ed. will shoot any one that interferes with him or annoys me," was what she said to one of them the other day. It is only a few months since Stokes came with of Stor. Sing apparently a penicent out of Sing Sing apparently a penitent man; but it Mrs. Thomas is to be believed, he is ready to serve some one cise in the same way that he served Fisk. But the probabilities are that he will not be "provoked." The doctor is willing to get out of the way as soon as he can procure a divorce, and the Court has ordered the trial to go on, whether the dector's wife puts in an appearance or not.—[N. Y. Letter.

STRANGE CAUSE FOR SUICIDE.

A Chief Engineer in the British Navy has cut his throat in sheer desperation at the incurable nature of the defects in his vessel's machinery. The story comes to us from the cupe of Good Hope, and is a singular one. Her Majesty's ship Tourmaline, twelve gues, left Sheer-ness for the African coast some time about the end of last year, and from the day after the sailing a series of contro temps began.
It all reserved to the machinery. Even on her trial trip the bearings got hot, but she was soon after sent to sea. She successfully rounded the North Fore-land, but off Deal she had to stop, the bearings having again got hot. Next the receiving tank burst, and after this there was a constant series of mishaps. The laxity of the boilers, the outrageous irregularities of the engines, the suap-ping of "trunks" on the after cylinder, the wearing away of the ec-centric rod liners, the "difficulties" with the piston, the obstinacy of the propeller, which took four hours to get up, and could not be got down unless the engines were moved backward and forward about a dozen times, the awful doings of a "ne leat pump," which took part in the general anarchy, and made a "terrible" noise; the wearing of this, the cracking and banging of thatall these things proved too much for the engineer in charge of them all. On the 27th of January the poor fellow cut his throat; the noise of the 'eccentrics' had disturbed his rest, and he often thought that something was going

Where every wheel, rod, piston, and cylinder seems to have done what was right in its own eyes, it may seem inidious to name the special irritant that drove the poor engineer temporarily out of his wits; but his nervous system having become unhinged, anything sufficed, and the man who would have slept soundly amid the din of twenty steam-engines, had they worked smooth ly, could not close his eyes when one went amiss and threatened the safety of dently conscientious officer lost his life, because he was sent to sen in a vessel which the admiralty should have known was unseaworthy.

As the superb Grand Hetel of New York is the famous resort of high-toned people—an impression may prevail that it is a very dear place to live. This is not the case. The rates of charges are no higher than at other hotels, while its eligible location and most excellent management commend it to the special notice of strangers visiting the city.
